Getting the right tools In addition to selecting the right program to manipulate your images, you must decide what tools and accessories you need to accomplish your goals. There are so many tools out there and so many ways to use them that it can be overwhelming for a beginning photographer. The great thing about having other graphics designers working with you is that you can share the cost and get the best advice available for your kind of project. With Photoshop, you need a number of pieces of equipment in order to achieve the final look you want. These include a computer, a monitor or a television, a mouse, and of course, the software. Here are some of the more commonly used tools that you may want to invest in: * Printers and other artwork supplies: You will need a printer or perhaps more than one, as well as a variety of papers and other supplies. Scanning your images and outputting them to a format your monitor can display is another way to add them to your photomontage. Be sure to use only papers and materials that don't offset your images, as doing so can ruin your project. * Lighting equipment: This includes _diffusers_ (softboxes) and _platter-style_ reflectors. Diffusers distribute light evenly over a surface. Platter-style reflectors are generally used to light up a model for fashion photography or to soften light off a couple. * Computer: To manipulate your images, you need a computer that can run the software and provide the CPU (Central Processing Unit) power needed to operate the software at its best. The computer you choose should be fast, have plenty of RAM (Random-Access Memory), and be expandable. Also, it should have a printer port, as you will need a printer to output your finished images. Image-editing software becomes faster and more powerful as you add more RAM (up to 16 GB) and hard-drive space (up to 1 TB). * Monitor: If you have a laptop, you will need a monitor that can display the image you are working on. You may need to consider two monitors for working with multiple projects at the same time. * Monitor stand: If your monitor is on a desk or in a crowded studio, you need a _monitor stand_ (mounted tripod

Q: Is a list of strings with length, no repeating values always unique? In Python 3.5.2, what is the fastest way to create a list of strings with a specified length but without repeating values? This seems hard so here is an example: `li = ['a', 'a', 'b', 'b', 'c', 'd', 'd', 'a']` A: In Python 3, you can use the Counter class: `>>> from collections import Counter >>> li = ['a', 'a', 'b', 'b', 'c', 'd', 'd', 'a'] >>> c = Counter(li) >>> c` Counter({'a': 2, 'c': 1, 'b': 2, 'd': 2}) Or, for Python 2.7: `>>> from collections import defaultdict >>> li = ['a', 'a', 'b', 'b', 'c', 'd', 'd', 'a'] >>> d = defaultdict(int) >>> for k, v in li: ... d[k] += 1 ... >>> d` defaultdict({'a': 2, 'c': 1, 'b': 2, 'd': 2}) defaultdict is a counter implementation that uses a dictionary. Q: Spring Boot Websocket, Smart client We have a Smart client that sends data to a server. This client uses Spring Websockets to send data. The Smart Client subscribes a channel so the client can get messages from the server. And when a message arrives, the client can do something with that message. If I want to send an event from my server to another Smart Client, what will happen to the connection of the Smart Client that subscribes to the channel? This other Smart Client will receive the event? Or both Smart Clients will receive the event? Does this mean both channels need to be up and running? A: If you use WebSocketChannelInterceptor, the client channel will be closed when it gets the message from the server. When you use @MessageMapping, the message is mapped to a ChannelInterceptor. There can be only one MessageMapping per channel. So if a ChannelInterceptor returns a response, it closes the channel. If the application returns a response,

Thermal behavior of nanocrystalline hexagonal boron nitride: bulk materials and nanostructured surfaces. Thermal behavior of single crystals of hexagonal boron nitride (BN) was investigated using differential scanning calorimetry. The temperature dependent heating and cooling curves obtained by thermal gravimetric analysis were analyzed in view of a possible thermal evolution of nanostructures. The starting surface of the sample with nanorods of BN was characterized by scanning electron microscopy, energy-dispersive x-ray analysis and electron back-scatter diffraction. The thermogravimetry and the isothermal crystallization temperatures were both in the range of 550-550 degrees C. Heating curves of the raw material were used to obtain a kinetic energy distribution function for crystallization which allowed the determination of an activation energy of about 55-58 kJ mol⁻¹. Network Shutdowns during ISP Downtime Announcements - msb ===== mtgx For those going to Mozilla's site, this is a way to get the important stuff without being interrupted by ads. It's a great way to deliver a message instead of just blasting people with more ads (which the web really should never do). ~~~ andyjdavis It's annoying that you can't tell which of the 4 things they want you to sign up for is the service that provides network reliability. ----- toddmorey I wonder if there were any service discontinuities with this week's Comcast shutdown. My network just got very busy yesterday afternoon after Cnbc did an airing of a documentary called "The Internet is Under Attack" featuring the shutdown. I know a couple people that work for a company that runs infrastructure for Netflix, and they had to quickly and temporarily step down. No one knows how much impact the coverage had. ~~~ swombat I haven't had Cnbc (a major American news channel) on for a very long time. I have had Comcast for probably four years now. What channel did you have them on? And how many people saw that? ----- throwaway2048 Seems like a very silly and weak move by Comcast. As a
